IATDP 100 YEARS
“OUR FOUNDER’S VISION & LEGACY”
Conference Opening Presentation by Ronnie Land

Hello and welcome to this 100th Annual Conference of this Association. One hundred years ago, a man had a vision that all children were entitled to an education and should be in school each school day to receive that education. Who was this man? Our founder, Mr. William Lester Bodine.

A very influential leader in Chicago and a journalist, Mr. Bodine realized the importance of spreading the word about the need for children to be in school. He organized and led the adoption of new laws in Chicago and in the state of Illinois requiring children to be in school each school day. With more and more people seeing the need for compulsory school attendance, Mr. Bodine saw a need to organize and lead a national organization for leaders who work in the field of compulsory school attendance. In 1911, Mr. Bodine founded our Association and hosted the first annual conference in Chicago. The new Association, National League of Compulsory Education Officials (N.L.C.E.O.), had their first conference at the Sherman Hotel in Chicago, Illinois in October of 1911. Mr. Bodine was elected as the first President of the League. His vision and leadership spread across the country and many states sent leaders to attend the conference. At that time, the states were represented by state delegates. The idea for compulsory school attendance spread across the United States with many states adopting new laws requiring school age children to attend school. By the 1930's, most states had laws in place for compulsory school attendance.

Over the one hundred years of this Association, the name has changed but the vision and mission of our founder has never changed. The first name change was National League to Promote School Attendance at the National Conference in 1937. The next name change was at the National Conference in 1957. The name was changed to "International Association of Pupil Personnel Workers" due to truant officers being classified as pupil personnel workers. In 2002 at the annual conference in Alexandria, Virginia, the name was again changed to the present name, "International Association for Truancy and Dropout Prevention". It was thought that people around the world would have a better understanding of the Association's real mission -- Truancy and Dropout Prevention.

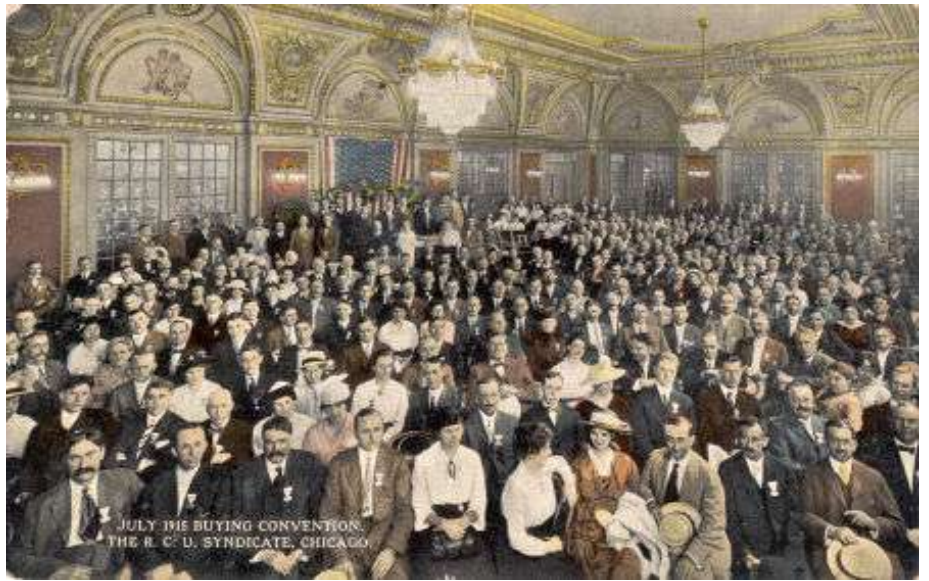

100 years later, here we are... same vision, same mission, and same goal of keeping our school age children in school. Mr. William Lester Bodine, our founder, would be pleased to know 100 years later his vision continues. The International Association for Truancy & Dropout Prevention should be proud and remain strong in the support of this vision.

Now, I will introduce you to some interesting facts about our founder and his family. Mr. William Bodine was a journalist, a writer, a music composer, and had a love for boating. He was a Superintendent of Compulsory School Attendance in Chicago for many years. He set up the first conference at the Sherman Hotel in Chicago, the largest hotel west of New York City (1700 rooms). A slide show of Mr. Bodine and his family descendents was shown at the 100th year conference and will be displayed on the IATDP website (www.iatdp.org). I give much appreciation and thanks to Mrs. Maureen Rivera, direct descendent and Great Granddaughter of William Lester Bodine, for assisting me and supplying the historical photos of our founder and his family.
